A British View of the American Tariff.

Sheffield Daily Telegraph.
"The promoters of the McKinley tariff meant it to push forward the policy of America for the Americans. One method of realizing it was to keep all work within their own dominions. The country was to be made self-sufficient; what could be produced at home was not to be bought abroad. That was the key-note of the McKinley scheme, and it is working out the idea of the designers with the precision and effectiveness of a machine."

REPUBLICAN victory in the coming election would retard for a long time the progress of the sound commercial doctrine that underlie the commercial greatness of Great Britain and alone maintain British ascendancy.—London Evening News.

IN 1890 it was a conflict of predictions; now our adversaries must face trade statistics and prices current.—President Harrison, June 21, 1892.

The Difference.
The "esteemed but confused" Register doesn't seem to see the difference between the actions of the Republican and Democratic conventions regarding recognition of the farmers. The point made by the INTELLIGENCER was that several candidates were presented to the Parkersburg convention as representative farmers and recognition was asked for them. Every one of them was turned down. They had made their canvass as farmer candidates and they came before the convention as such. One of them, a leading candidate for governor, was even cruelly deserted at a time when his nomination was probable.

The farming element of the state have no cause for such grievance against the Republican convention. They came before it with no candidate for place to ask recognition in vain. Had they presented a representative they would undoubtedly have received respectful treatment, for there was no slate constructed by party bosses to interfere with the freedom of action by delegates. The farmers in the convention and all over the state witnessed with satisfaction, however, the selection of candidates from among the people who represent the interests of the whole people, and who will not be the tools of rings and cliques.

The convention made its own ticket and united on it. It represents every interest and is composed of men who have risen from the farm and workshop to high position through their own industry and merit. Not one of them was nominated because he belonged to this class or that class, but because of his fitness for the place. No farmers, or any other class of taxpayers, went home from Huntington feeling dissatisfied with the result.

Thomas C. Miller.
No position to be filled by the people of West Virginia this fall is of greater importance than that of Superintendent of Schools; nor is there any office in the competent administration of which every home in the state is more directly interested.

Thomas C. Miller, the Republican nominee for this position, is not only a popular candidate, but is one of the best equipped men in the state. He holds high rank among the foremost educators of the country, for his fame is not confined within the boundaries of his native state. He has been in demand from other states as an institute instructor, and enjoys the distinction throughout the length and breadth of West Virginia as the ablest of all such instructors, while he is loved, respected and admired everywhere for his high character and his splendid record as a public school man.

Mr. Miller is not, like his Democratic competitor, engaged in any other following. He is a professional educator and that has been his life's work. He is a man of broad and liberal views on all educational matters, is equally a friend of the free schools and the higher institutions of learning. Himself a college man, he is as friendly to the interests of the university and the colleges of the state as to the normal schools, while, since the lines of work in his chosen profession have been cast among the public schools, he is an enthusiastic supporter of all movements to increase their efficiency. Add to these qualifications the fact that Mr. Miller is a man of progressive ideas, possesses splendid executive ability, is a Christian gentleman, an ex-soldier who has buried the animosities of the war, but who has not forgotten what it was he fought for, and you have a fair picture of the next state superintendent of free schools.

Mr. Pendleton Held the Gavel.
A correspondent of the Register, referring to the INTELLIGENCER's remarks about Mr. Pendleton's record in Congress, seems to think that the "young" man was covered all over with glory and was the subject of marked distinction when one day Speaker Crisp called him to the chair to preside temporarily. Those familiar with the routine of Congress would see nothing extraordinary about the honor. It is not a distinction that members of the house seek, and many of them are glad to escape it. If it pleased Mr. Pendleton's vanity to be permitted to sit in Mr. Crisp's seat and hold the gavel for an hour or so, while Mr. Crisp went to lunch or attended to other business, it served a purpose, but it did not prove Mr. Pendleton to be a great statesman, and that he should be re-elected to Congress.

A small boy is the proudest individual you ever saw when permitted to sit on the driver's seat and "hold the horses" while his father goes into the store to transact some business, but this does not indicate that the father has confidence in the boy's ability to drive the team.

The following is taken from the Register's local account of the return of the Ohio county delegation from the Republican state convention at Huntington:

The members of the Ohio county delegation all expressed themselves as well pleased with the result. They say Mr. Hooten was a little disappointed in the outcome of the race for the seat of the ticket. As one delegate put it: "They say Davis is not well enough known throughout the state, but there is such a thing as being too well known." He thought Mr. Davis would be a strong candidate, as he is a good business man and possesses all the necessary qualifications for governor, although not a good public speaker.

And so it is all over the state Republicans are thoroughly united on the ticket. Davis is a growing candidate.

THERE is one part of the Democratic national platform which a great many people are anxiously wondering if Mr. Cleveland will endorse in his letter of acceptance. Those who would like to know Mr. Cleveland's position are not all Republicans. Among them are thousands of Democrats. They want to know what is wrong with the national banking system that his party denounces it in its platform and advocates a return of the "wild cat" banks. It is a grave question which Mr. Cleveland should not be permitted to ignore. Mr. Cleveland's friend Whitney, who is something of a financier, might consent to advise him on the subject.

It is proposed to hold, at Charleston, during the session of legislature, next winter, a reunion of the surviving members of the constitutional convention of 1872. There are only a few of them left, and they are requested to make themselves known so that the proper steps may be taken to arrange a programme. Mr. Septimus Hall, of New Martinsville, Wetzel county, was the youngest member of the convention and is now in the prime of life. The convention met January 16 and adjourned April 9, 1872.

The total state and county debt of West Virginia, less the sinking fund, is but $1.81 per capita, which is smaller than that of any other state in the Union with the exception of Rhode Island, New Mexico and Utah.—Register.

Then we have a state debt, have we? And don't you know that, even if it is ever so little, it was created in defiance of the constitution, unless it was to meet a casual deficit in the revenue?

The Fifty-second Congress will go down in history as the most "do-nothing" national legislature that has ever assembled. Despite its 150 Democratic majority it has done nothing but make itself ridiculous in the eyes of the country. It has proved to be little more than a disorganized mob, and its whole record is a vindication of Henry Waterson's declaration that the Democratic majority was "dangerously large"—from a Democratic point of view. From a Republican standpoint it has been anything but dangerous.

No Wonder They are Confused.
It is hard for a First district Democrat to understand just where to find himself, or rather where to find his party, on the silver question. Two years ago John O. Pendleton was nominated for Congress on a free silver platform. He was elected, but when he carried out his instructions and voted for free silver he was roundly denounced for it by his constituents. He was even counselled by his party organ, (which had supported him, with his free coinage platform) to dodge the question.

Then, this year, these self-same Democrats met at Weston to select delegates to Chicago. Here, again, was a free coinage resolution unanimously passed. It was a virtual instruction to the First district delegates to vote for a free silver plank at Chicago. The opportunity came when a free coinage substitute was offered in the convention for the straddle reported by the committee on resolutions, but the delegates voted for the straddle, ignoring their instructions.

Now, once more, the First district Democrats assemble in convention at New Martinsville, and what do they do? They renominate Mr. Free-Coinage, Pendleton and endorse the national platform, which isn't for free coinage but (as a straddle) is acceptable to Mr. Cleveland, who is eternally opposed to a free silver policy—the policy for which Mr. Pendleton voted in Congress.

It is no wonder that a First district Democrat doesn't know whether he is on his head or his heels, and looks helpless when asked how he stands on the financial question, which is one of the most important issues of the hour.

The Democratic house was unable to break the deadlock and proceed with the public business until it adopted one of the hated Reed rules—and it was the cloture rule, too, the most offensive one of them all, and the one that was denounced on every Democratic stump in the country. Thus are the Democrats forced to acknowledge their own incompetency and to vindicate the wisdom of the rules that governed the last Republican house.

AFTER wasting many days of valuable time filibustering to defeat the World's Fair bill on the ground that it was unconstitutional, the Democratic obstructionists in Congress at last surrendered and the measure was passed. The Democratic house has scored a magnificent success in making itself ridiculous from first to last.

DEMOCRATIC papers are not pleased at what Republican papers say about the war records of Cleveland and Stevenson. They can console themselves with the thought that the records are satisfactory to the men who fought to destroy the union.

THE Republicans who met at Huntington did not expect the Wheeling Register to be pleased with their work and are not disappointed that the Democratic "organ" finds fault with it.

THE only dissatisfaction expressed with the Republican state ticket comes from the Democrats. Republicans are united and harmonious, and will support it to a man.

What West Virginia Should Do.

Pittsburgh Times.
The Republicans of West Virginia ought to win. They have nominated a strong ticket and their candidates stand on a platform which embodies every Republican principle.

By history and interest West Virginia's rightful place is in the Republican ranks. Spurning secession and disunion, she turned her back upon the parent state and had a new birth into freedom and statehood. The development of her wonderful resources can only be fully accomplished by the maintenance of the Republican system of protection. Reasons practical and sentimental bind her to the Republican party.

And her march in late years had been steadily towards the old and true field. From 13,000 in 1876 and 11,000 in 1880, her Democratic majority fell to 4,200 in 1884 and 552 in 1888. The current is Republican-ward. With a strong ticket and a sound platform, it needs only harmonious and united effort to place West Virginia in the Republican column and make the first break in the Solid South.

Yes, It's the Count.

West Virginia Republicans show the grit and enthusiasm necessary for a winning fight. They have no fear concerning the result of the vote this fall. It is the count that requires the most determined and alert attention.

Ringing Resolutions.

Pittsburgh Commercial Gazette.
Besides nominating a strong and popular ticket, the West Virginia Republicans adopted a ringing declaration of principles, a platform more aggressive and comprehensive than has been issued in that state for years. It is the language of men who mean to win.

"Will Be Happy Yet, You Bet."

West Union Record (Dem.).

Rev. Charles Caldwell, the farmer, lawyer, preacher, doctor and oil man of Wood county, was pitted against Caphart for Congress down in the Fourth district on Tuesday. What's the matter with the Republicans this year?

We Do the Best.

John O. Pendleton was renominated for Congress yesterday by the Democratic convention here. You have pressed the button, we do the rest.

SIX OF US AFFLICTED

With Crusty, Scaly Skin Disease.
It Tormented Us All—Almost Drove My Wife Mad.

Doctors and Medicines Failed—Instant Relief and Speedy Cure of All by Cuticura.

Three years ago my wife, four little children, and myself were afflicted with a crusty, scaly disease of the skin. It tormented us all. Such a plague I hope will never again visit my family. My children's ages were respectively nine, seven and four years, except the youngest, who was only two months old. Of all our suffering, my wife suffered the most. It almost drove her mad. The disease first made its appearance on my wife's back between the shoulders, and spread across to her breast. It looked like it was covered over with little scales. I first bought of a drug store medicine for skin disease, which failed to do any good whatever. I next employed a doctor who gave relief for a short while. After trying him for quite a while without effecting a cure, I called in another doctor who proved to do no better. Then the first cure, and CUTICURA, an exquisite skin beautifier, clear the skin and scalp and restore the hair. Thus the Crusty, Scaly Skin Disease, every species of itching, burning, scaly, pimply, and blotchy skin, scalp and blood diseases, when the best physicians fail.

Sold everywhere. Price, CUTICURA, 25c.; POTTER, 25c.; RESOLVENT, $1. Prepared by Dr. J. C. CUTICURA and Chemical Corporation, Boston.

Illustrations, and testimonials, mailed free. BABY'S Skin and Scalp purified and beautified by CUTICURA SOAP. Absolutely pure.
